“The Name Jar” Literacy & Game Activity for School Aged

This Literacy/ Game is a great way to build a community within the daycare. Children are able to share an important aspect of themselves (the story of their name) with the group through game and discussion. This will also build on their social skills, reading comprehension, writing, and reflection.

Material: Jar / paper / pencil

Direction: Have the children write down a few sentence about their name/ made up or true (Fiction / Non Fiction) On another slip of paper have them write their name. Let them present what they wrote about their name in front of the players. After they present they drop their name and the paper of sentence in the jar. After everyone present it and drop it in the jar let the children take turns to pick a small paper/ Then have them pick one of the sentence strips they think the name goes with. If they remember which two goes together they win. Have Fun! 😊

Rapid-Fire Writing Games for School Age

Things you need for rapid-fire writing games for kids: White sheets and pens

Instructions

- Rapid-fire writing games for kids are more exciting when you play with friends! As the name suggests, the players are supposed to play the game at a quick pace.
- Divide the kids into two teams with an equal number of participants in each team. Nominate one child in each team just to assign the words.
- The nominated child should call out any random word like trees, lakes, mountains, dogs, etc. The other kids from both the teams should write any phrase related to the word within ten to twenty seconds.
- The team with the most meaningful sentences related to the topic is the winner. Continue the game until each child gets a chance to win. This activity is under School Age DRDP: S1 S2 S5 S7 S8 S9
